Time: 4pm - 6pm

Synopsis

Contrary to popular belief among people unfamiliar with data protection legislation, obtaining consent is not the only legal path to personal data processing : for instance, an increasing number of data privacy laws envisage a number of situations in which such processing is implicitly considered within the data subject's interest or the legitimate interest of data controllers. What are those situations and how do they differ in Europe, Singapore, and other Asian jurisdictions? This webinar will seek to shed some light on the commonalities and differences in both regions.

It is also commonly considered that obtaining consent is the ultimate shield against illegal data processing ; but is this really the case? To what extent will a court or a regulator consider that an actual consent has been obtained from the data subject ? Studying the requirements for consent collection in Europe and Asia is critical for businesses seeking to create a common data processing scheme for their clients in both regions; this webinar will help in making the right choices.
